A straightforward and easy walk along riverside pastures with a better than average chance in summer of seeing a kingfisher, sand martins, goosander, Canada geese, greylag geese, oystercatcher and leaping fish.

 From the edge of the car park there is a splendid view over the Lune towards Ingleborough, one painted by J M W Turner. From this viewpoint, bear right down a sloping pathway (ignore the nearby steps), and, at the bottom turn left across an old viaduct onto the trackbed of the former Lancaster to Wennington railway line, now part of the River Lune Millennium Park. Cross the viaduct, and continue a short distance farther to a path on the right, which heads through a gate and then curves immediately right beside a wall to a narrow footbridge immediately below the viaduct.

The 'Turner' view, Crook o'Lune

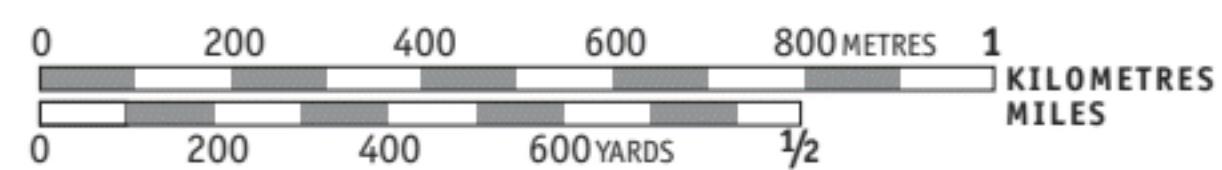

Heading back to Eaves Wood

Beyond the end of the lake, keep an eye open for a gate on the left and turn through it to cross a small area of grassland to another gate giving onto a stony track. Turn left, walking through woodland once more, and soon passing a derelict cottage. The path eventually leads out to a road, but before reaching this branch left through a gap-stile B and along a grassy, permissive path below Challan Hall. Towards the end of the houses at Challan Hall, a footpath can be seen to enter the edge of the field by a step-stile. Drawing level with it, bear left along an ongoing grassy path to a step-stile beyond which you cross a wide meadow to a railway line. Cross with care, and then go forward alongside a wall to a road.

but is now more dilapidated. It curves to the right across the moor, accompanied by an indistinct grassy path. When the ruined wall meets a more substantial version, keep an eye open for a through-stile on the right, just above a wall corner. Cross the stile and turn immediately left through a gate.

Descend beside the wall, and follow it as it bears left to a ladder-stile and gate. Go left, and immediately right, over a step-stile, descending alongside a wall, heading for Wycoller, which can be seen enclosed by trees in the valley below, and may well have been the view which inspired Charlotte Brontë to write:

'Even when within a very short distance of the manor-house, you could see nothing of it, so thick and dark grew the timber of the gloomy wood about it.'

As you reach lower ground, pass through a gated stile (waymarked) and left across a field towards Copy House Farm D. Walk up to the farm, and pass to the right of the farmhouse, walking out on its access track. A few strides farther on, at a wall corner, go through a gap and descend beside a wall. At the bottom of the field, almost rejoin the outward route, but rather than cross a small bridge, go left along a surfaced path that eventually rejoins the outward route near Wycoller Hall. Now simply retrace the outward route to go back to the car park.

Craggy Bowland Knotts, a line of low gritstone crags, lie in an area of Lancashire that few walkers will immediately recognise.

For a quiet day of far-reaching views, rugged walking and a sense of freedom, this circuit, in spite of a long stretch of downhill road walking to finish, can hardly be bettered.

The right to roam has been enjoyed on the Darwen Moors for more than 100 years, long before the better-known episode in the Peak District in the 1930s. After a long struggle, spearheaded by the Ashton family, rights of access over the moors were transferred to the Darwen Corporation in 1896. What was actually happening back then was the re-establishment of rights of access that had existed for centuries, when local people would cross the moors on their way to work in the mills and collieries that existed here. The erosion of these rights in favour of 'sporting' interests caused resentment and was not forgotten.

 From the car park cross a bus turning area and then the road. Go through gates to reach a footpath sign in 35 yards. Here, go right, following the 'Woods and Water Trail'. The path descends steadily to a cross-path. Turn right here on a broad path – still the 'Woods and Water Trail' – then after
