Tackled from Derwent, the Derwent Edge demands a strenuous climb. But this roundabout route above Ladybower Brook and the moor behind the scarp adopts a more leisurely approach. Stunning views accompany the return past the southern-most of the outcrops, for which the edge is famous.

This enjoyable walk revels in splendid scenery and passes through one of the Peak District’s few remaining oak woods. This was once the predominant vegetation of the northern Peak and in the sloping shelter of the valley, there is a rich variety of plant life, including mosses, lichens and ferns. Limestone erupts just to the south, but here the hills are gritstone, their exposed tops cloaked in peat and heather moor that is home to red grouse. The lack of cover also encourages predators such as peregrine and merlin, which hover motionless in the wind before swooping down upon their prey. And, if your luck is really in, you might also see a mountain hare.

From the parking area, walk towards the viaduct spanning the northern arm of the Ladybower Reservoir. Just before, cross to a rising tarmac drive and follow it around a sharp bend. Through a gate continue to the end, where a path is signed to Cutthroat Bridge through a gate ahead A.

soon joining the Pennine Bridleway to pass through a gate. The onward track leads away across the fields to meet the corner of a lane E.

Walk ahead past the scattered dwellings of Blackwell, continuing over a crossroads towards Priestcliffe and Taddington. Where the rising lane eventually bends sharp right, abandon it for a broad, walled track on the left, the Limestone Way F. Aptly named Long Lane, the track steadily loses height for the next ¾ mile (1.2km), revealing a superb view into Wye Dale and the foot of Monk's Dale. It eventually leads to the B6049, just west of Miller's Dale.

Go left to the bend, leaving there over a stile on the right G. Drop left, across a sloping meadow to a stream emanating from Blackwell Dale and cross to a stile

Drop steeply down the snout of the hill, bearing left at a fork lower down to meet a lane. Go left to a small parking area, where a track climbs towards Worlow Quarry. At the first sharp bend, leave ahead on a rough grass track contouring the hillside. Keep going,
